Thrombectomy procedures allow surgeons to use a mechanical thrombectomy device such as intracoronary catheters to break up or remove the blood clot and restore normal blood flow in the human body. It helps neurosurgeons to improve patients’ health, especially those experiencing a large artery stroke. Thrombectomy devices can be used in patients for whom pharmacological treatments such as thrombolysis are likely to be ineffective or inappropriate, for instance, in case of recent surgery or in patients who are taking oral anticoagulants.
