shares, "We believe that the new name better reflects the program's focus on early-career professionals who are looking to enhance their skill sets and expand their career prospects. We look forward to continuing to develop and nurture this next generation of business leaders."

Liesl Bohan

Launched in 2013, the Early Career MBA program is designed specifically for recent graduates and early career professionals from a wide variety of academic backgrounds, who have less than three years of work experience.

The one-year, accelerated program offers a comprehensive curriculum that encompasses fundamental business concepts, such as accounting, finance, business ethics, and marketing, while providing students with access to a range of experiential learning opportunities.

The latter includes consulting projects, business mentors, career guidance activities, networking events, and internships -- all of which are intended to help students build the skills and connections necessary to succeed in today's business environment.

“I believe the Early Career MBA program is unique because not only does it provide non-business undergrads with a solid foundation in business and a meaningful point of entry into the business world, but it does so in a collaborative, cohort environment where students can create a network of lifelong colleagues and friends," says Liesl Bohan, Early Career MBA Program Director.

"Students graduate ready to launch or pivot their careers, prepared to fast track their career journeys, and are strong candidates for future leadership positions," she adds.

The Early Career MBA Program is now accepting applications for the Fall 2023 cohort. For more information, please visit the Early Career MBA website.
