More important is the insightful coaching she shares with leaders that helped her to earn her top-notch reputation. This March, a time that includes St Patrick's Day, 5 Wednesdays, and the beginning of Spring, she will be sharing wisdom on subjects geared to help businesses thrive in these challenging times, with an impending recession and unpredictable job market.

"Only about 9 percent of businesses increase their revenues in times like these. The rest tend to decline, or even go out of business altogether. I want to focus on how businesses can be among those that grow in a challenging environment."

Christine will speak about ways for businesses to cope with what is referred to as VUCA times, which Forbes defines as Volatile, Uncertain, Complex and Ambiguous. For the non-expert, that means, hey, its crazy out there, but the sharpest will figure out a way to deal with it and thrive.

Christine will discuss moving from a long-range planning strategy to a scenario planning practice. She will share thoughts on accountability, and ways that top leaders can effectively support teams to get results without being too controlling. She will also relate how like St. Patrick, CEOs and small business owners can learn to "see the snakes that have crept into their businesses and drive them out." For the beginning of Spring, the growing season, she will share 8 Ways to Grow Value in Your Company.

A popular radio and podcast guest, Christine has also launched a new virtual learning community, CEOAccelTM, where CEOs of hi-revenue companies and entrepreneurial masterminds collaborate and learn together as they address economic shifts, globalization, technology, and similar shared business priorities.
