3-day education event reviews prevailing education scam offenses in the sector while suggesting effective prevention methods to prevent people from scammers.

LAS VEGAS, NEVADA, UNITED STATES, March 10, 2023 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Today, with advancements in technology and an increase in educational institutions offering degrees and certificates, the demand for getting a degree has grown drastically. However, not all educational programs and institutions offering degrees are legit, reviews Education 2.0 Conference's Winter Edition. The education summit took place in Mandalay Bay, Las Vegas, USA, on December 19-21, 2022.

The panelists of the session highlighted how there has been an increase in fake degree scam offenses related to obtaining degrees and certifications illegally. Some institutions provide students with degrees without them ever having to attend the classes, submit coursework, or pass an exam. This results in students getting unaccredited or fake degrees without them putting in the necessary effort and knowledge to receive the degree or certification.

When researching an educational institution or degree program, there are some common warning signs to look out for, suggested at the Education 2.0 Conference's panel discussion. These include claims that guarantee acceptance or offer diplomas or degrees without having to take any courses or complete any tests or other requirements. In addition, any claims of earning a degree or certification in a very short time frame or any attempts to hide accreditation information or the requirements for enrollment should be seen as a red flag. Finally, avoid any suspicious offers such as unsolicited emails or text messages that include offers for degree programs, especially if they require any payment or personal information.

Scammers often promise a degree or a certification that is either not valid or doesn't exist. The session shared preventive measures that can protect you from being taken advantage of by the scammers. One of the first steps in detecting a fake degree scam is to check online reviews. Do a quick search to read reviews and find out what others are saying, shares one of the panelists at the Education 2.0 Conference. This can provide information and details about a potential scam before you commit.

Another great way to detect fake degree scams is to educate yourself on current and new laws governing degree mills. This includes research into specific legislation and rulings passed. Keeping up-to-date by attending education conferences and forums in 2023, such as the Education 2.0 Conference, as it can also be helpful to detect and avoid possible degree scam offenses.

One of the best ways, suggested by the leaders, to identify fake degree scam offenses is to do your own research. Take time to research the organization's accreditation, admission procedures and curriculum. It's also important to look for key phrases, terms, and concepts to get an idea if the website or school is real or a fraud, reviews Education 2.0 Conference.
