Action is integral. Aquarium led community trash cleanups have prevented over 15,000 lbs of trash from entering the San Francisco Bay.

Habitat regeneration is urgent. Diving for citizen science scuba course offers certifications to divers in kelp restoration and underwater naturalist specialties. This program is critical to regenerate the struggling kelp forests that benefit seals, sea lions, whales, sea otters, gulls, terns, snowy egrets, great blue herons, cormorants, and shore birds in the Monterey Bay.

Research is influential. Groundbreaking research on animals like the broadnose seven gill shark and giant pacific octopus have provided data that has directly contributed to the expansion of of shark conservation policy, and best practices for limiting animal stress in octopus care.
