Scalp Cooling System Market

A coolant that is kept at a low temperature between -15°F and -40°F is contained in helmet-like structures known as scalp cooling systems. These systems aid in minimising hair loss brought on by chemotherapy.

Chemotherapeutic drugs, which cause hair loss when used to treat cancer, target cells that divide quickly. By restricting the blood arteries found beneath the scalp, scalp cooling systems lessen the amount of chemotherapy drugs that reach the hair follicles. Cold temperatures reduce the activity of hair follicles by slowing down cell division; as a result, chemotherapeutic drugs have less of an impact on the follicles.
