The unique six or twelve piece set is collaborative art inviting customers to create their own display to feature produce, personal items and more.

The design was created by Tair Bet Or, an Industrial Design student at Holon Institute of Technology in Israel, who named the piece after her mother, Galia. The vibrant colors and scents of the fruit her mother brought from the market every week, were the inspiration when creating the display. From fruit and vegetables to jewelry, electronics and beyond, the Galia provides the possibility to craft a new, individual art display every day. "This collaborative art display was designed for you to express your vision and have the freedom to change it around as you see fit," said Tair Bet Or.
