Cystitis, a painful and common condition that affects millions every year, is very common. Cystitis refers to inflammation of the bladder that can be caused by infection, irritation, or injury. Cystitis can be characterized by frequent, urgent urination as well as pain in the pelvic area, burning sensation, and cloudy, strong-smelling urine. Cystitis can cause serious complications, such as kidney damage, if left untreated.

A bacterial infection is one of the leading causes of cystitis. This can cause the bacteria to enter the urinary system through the urethra. Because women have a shorter urethra than men, this makes it easier for bacteria and viruses to enter their bladders. Poor hygiene, inappropriate sexual activity, and the use of certain contraceptives like diaphragms and spermicides are all risk factors for cystitis.
