Hailing from twin cities, Steven attended film school at Minnesota State University Moorhead in 2016. While still a student he officially entered the American entertainment industry in 2017 with a nine-minute-long comedy-drama short film Stanley starring Bed Ledinsky, which was appreciated for the story-line and direction. He has achieved a career milestone with Hair Trigger, his first feature-length film. Some of his other works include Urban Luau, and the Honest Work, in which he collaborated with Joe Greening and Nick Biewer.

In pursuit of achieving unprecedented heights of filmmaking, Steven set out to shoot Hair-Trigger on a minimal budget; speaking to the marketing team of the film, he shared the risk he ran to make Hair-Trigger a reality; he further shared.

"We were trying to figure out what kind of film we could do on a shoestring budget, and that's where the concept came from. Our budget was much less than that of Reservoir Dogs and Texas Chainsaw Massacre, but both of those films are regarded as low-budget, minimal-location indie classics despite their much big budgets. After recalling these movies and their recurring themes, I had the idea that it would be interesting to see how they might work in a cross-genre setting. Those two movies are what got me interested in making my own films. I thought it would be good to make Hair-Trigger as a tribute to the stories and filmmakers that sparked my initial interest in the profession, so I decided to give it a shot."

The film stars Emily Carlson, Chris Charais, and Joseph Schwartz in leading roles, all of which Steven carefully picked from the same film school he attended. Knowing half of the work of a good director goes into casting, Steven is currently occupied with editing his next short film titled 'Walk Away.'
