Secure Technology Integration Group (STIGroup) a firm that provides cybersecurity and IT consulting, engineering, and managed security services, has reached an agreement to purchase Lithan Networks, a national managed IT firm headquartered in Pennsylvania. This initial acquisition is a part of a larger strategy being employed by STIGroup, which consists of both acquisitions and investments in strategic partners to form a structured affiliate network of synergistic companies. "The importance of our first acquisition to our vision and growth strategy cannot be overstated," said Dominic Genzano, CEO and Founder of STIGroup. "Our review of Lithan Networks, and their clients and personnel, was extensive. The organization is an excellent fit- in terms of structure, methodology, capability, and culture- for the greater entity that we're building. We're excited for the value and potential that Lithan Networks adds to our organization, as well as the business and technical acumen that Greg Datz brings to our senior leadership team."

"I am beyond excited to be part of STIGroup," said Greg Datz, President and Founder of Lithan Networks "Their leadership and elite cybersecurity team are among the best in the industry. Lithan Networks and STIGroup have a long history of collaboration, so this coming together is a very natural progression at a time when cybersecurity needs to be integrated into every IT infrastructure solution. Our goal is to be the industry leader in development, delivery, and support of these cyber-integrated solutions and the unification of our teams is a great start towards the realization of this vision. I'm looking forward to the journey."
