Trending Transformer Market Trend

The Transformers market is moving towards the evolution of independent and self-regulating smart transformers. Smart transformers are programmed to constantly regulate voltage and maintain contact with the stakeholders and provide information and feedback on the power supply. They provide the exact amount of power that is needed and respond to fluctuations through a process known as voltage optimization. They significantly reduce greenhouse gas emissions and power consumption as they supply electrical equipment with the ideal amount of power. For instance, in 2021, Hitachi ABB Power Grids collaborated with Nanyang Technological University, Singapore (NTU Singapore) on a government-led smart grid development project. The two organizations will collaborate to advance developments in Solid State Transformer (SST) technology, led by the Energy Research Institute and supported by the National Research Foundation of Singapore. The project is part of Singapore's Energy Grid 2.0 initiative, which aims to shape the next-generation grid system and transform energy management by combining multiple energy sources into a single intelligent network that is more efficient, sustainable, and resilient.
