Last year TRHT Selma, through the Black Belt Community Foundation \(BBCF\), applied to receive funding to help incorporate the performance arts into the work of equity, inclusion, and economic development. BBCF applied to the Levitt Foundation and won designation as an AMP city in 2022. The Selma Center for Nonviolence, as the TRHT Selma programmatic partner, will assist in outreach to ensure broad community involvement. “TRHT Selma is grateful for the Levitt Foundation and our opportunity to expand the work of narrative change to include performing arts. If we can bring our community together with free live concerts, promote equity and healing,

The Levitt Amp Concert Series is coming to Selma via the work of TRHT Selma!

all while encouraging our neighbors who frequent the shows to take advantage of what our downtown has to offer, there's a win-win-win," shared TRHT Selma Director Lydia Chatmon.

Selma's Riverfront Amphitheater and Park was selected as the site to host the free concerts to help spur traffic throughout Selma's downtown and cause an economic uptick among downtown businesses on the weekend. Danielle Wooten, Director of Planning and Development for the City of Selma explained, "Levitt has a proven track record of being an economic driver and improving the quality of life for funded cities. We will not only have vendors from across the region, but also encourage concert goers to shop and explore Selma's downtown."
