E-learning Authoring Software has been a major driving force in this growth due to its affordability and ease of use. These tools make it possible for even non-technical individuals to create professional-looking online courses without needing expensive developers. Furthermore, many E-Learning Authoring Software providers offer cloud-based solutions that allow users to collaborate with people around the world on course content.

Despite this growth, however, there are certain limitations which limit its potential.

Lack of technical know-how among users is a major issue. Even though E-Learning Authoring Software makes it simple for those without programming skills to create interactive courses, they still require some level of expertise in order to fully utilize its features. Many potential users might feel overwhelmed or intimidated by the complexity of the software and opt for simpler solutions instead.
