A sterling example of its commitment to the community is its commitment to educating readers about various medical conditions that pop up at a moment's notice—specifically, dehydration and any questions patients may have about this serious medical condition.

Dehydration FAQs With Atlanta Urgent Care WestsideMed

Recently, the WestsideMed team published an article about dehydration FAQs and how to rehydrate. The article offers important information about the causes of dehydration and the best ways to stay hydrated. It also provides tips on how to recognize the symptoms of dehydration and when to seek medical attention.

In ‘Can Dehydration Cause High Blood Pressure? And Other Dehydration FAQs,’ the WestsideMed team answers common questions about dehydration, how it affects the body, and how to avoid and recover from it.

“Dehydration is a common issue that affects many. A variety of factors cause dehydration, and it can be perilous. It is essential to stay hydrated to maintain good health and prevent dehydration-related complications,” says Esteves.

“Despite its prevalence, many people have questions about dehydration and hydration, including whether or not dehydration can cause high blood pressure.”

Indeed, as WestsideMed experts go on to explain, dehydration can be a massive factor in rising blood pressure. It can also cause blood pressure to lower, known as hypotension.

“Dehydration can actually cause both low blood pressure and high blood pressure,” warns Esteves.

“When you're dehydrated, your body doesn't have enough fluid to properly regulate blood pressure, which can lead to a drop in blood pressure,” says Esteves. “Again, when you're dehydrated, your blood vessels constrict to help conserve water, which can increase blood pressure.”

Dehydration can occur for many reasons, including illness, intense physical activity, or simply not drinking enough fluids. It can be a severe condition, causing symptoms such as dizziness, fatigue, and confusion. Patients must seek medical attention immediately if they suspect they or a loved one may be dehydrated.

At Atlanta Urgent Care Westsidemed, the team of experienced medical professionals is here to help. The state-of-the-art facility is equipped with the latest technology, and the staff is trained to provide expert care for a wide range of medical conditions, including dehydration.

They offer a range of diagnostic tests and treatments to help patients recover from dehydration quickly and safely. The medical staff will work with patients to develop a personalized treatment plan that meets patients' unique needs and helps them get back on their feet as quickly as possible.
