A neonatal ventilator is a medical device that is used to assist the breathing of newborn infants who have respiratory distress or who are unable to breathe on their own. Neonatal ventilators are specially designed for use with premature or critically ill infants and are capable of delivering small volumes of air with precise control. Neonatal ventilators work by delivering oxygen-rich air to the infant's lungs through a tube that is inserted into their airway. The ventilator delivers the air in a controlled manner, with adjustable pressure and volume settings, to help the infant breathe more effectively.

Neonatal ventilators are equipped with sensors that monitor the infant's breathing and adjust the ventilator settings accordingly. They also have alarms that sound if the infant's breathing becomes too rapid, too slow, or too shallow. Neonatal ventilators are an essential tool in neonatal intensive care units (NICUs) and are used to support the breathing of infants with conditions such as respiratory distress syndrome, bronchopulmonary dysplasia, and apnea of prematurity. They are also used during surgeries and other medical procedures that require anesthesia.
