Cover Me Wear

Trish Steele, the founder and CEO of Safe Passage Heals, has recently launched a new line of cover wear. This new line includes stylish and comfortable clothing designed specifically for women who feel more comfortable covering up but also want to look fashionable. The cover wear is not only fashionable but also functional, providing protection, confidence, warmth, and love. With this launch, Trish Steele aims to empower women to feel confident and comfortable in their bodies, no matter their journey.

As a teenager, Trish was trained to be a fashion designer but took another career as a beauty consultant and makeup artist. When her daughter, Michelle Steele, was 10 years old, Michele grabbed the feel for sewing by hand and noticed that she was taking on Trish's teenage talent to be a designer.

Michelle started her first clothing line at the age of 14 with her mother's help. They called her "Cover Me Wear". The clothing line was published in the Celebrity Society Magazine and sold out her one-of-a-kind pancho.

This year, the mother and daughter duo are bringing back their Cover Me Wear line with new and fashionable styles. They aim for their fashion line to make a statement for today's women.

In Collaboration with Michelle Steele

Trish Steele and her daughter Michelle Steele, co-founded Cover Me Wear, a clothing line designed to provide comfortable and stylish clothing for women. Trish, who has a passion for fashion design, realized the need for comfortable clothing that provides coverage, protection, confidence, warmth, and love. Together with Michelle, they designed a line of clothing made with soft and breathable fabrics that are easy to wear and contribute to women's confidence.
