With years of experience and success behind her, Ann Dishinger hopes to put together a list of tips and suggestions to help ambitious and aspiring fashion designers get started.

Ann Dishinger believes that breaking into the fashion industry requires hard work and determination. She knew from an early stage that she wanted to work for herself, which meant taking extra steps right after college. She emphasizes the importance of leaning on mentors and networking, contributing to her success.

Dishinger advises that building a strong foundation in fashion is a significant first step to getting involved in the industry. This can involve taking courses, earning a degree, or gaining practical experience through internships or entry-level positions. She also emphasizes the importance of developing a unique point of view and aesthetic of one's own, as the fashion industry is highly competitive and requires standing out with a clear sense of style and vision.

Dishinger notes that the early stages involve long hours and minimal pay, so only those passionate about fashion will survive. She also stresses the need to create an intriguing and reputable portfolio, which is crucial for showcasing work and accomplishments. With the advent of digital media, building an online profile is easier than ever. It eliminates barriers that hurt many in the past.

Networking and making industry connections matter a lot in fashion. Dishinger advises starting early by attending industry events, joining professional organizations, and reaching out to people in the industry to make connections and learn about job opportunities. She also encourages staying current on industry trends and developments, which can help one evolve and not get stuck in old ways.

Ann Dishinger Chicago advises being persistent and not being afraid to take risks, as the fashion industry can be challenging and may take time to break through industry barriers. She stresses staying motivated and being willing to take on new challenges and opportunities as they come around.

As someone who values mentoring, Dishinger encourages older generations to give back to those hungry enough to pursue dreams in fashion. Her new personal website provides updates and general information on what she's doing within fashion.

Through the website and blogs, Ann Dishinger Chicago hopes to tell her story more often and give back to the entrepreneurial community. She has an extensive client base built through her creativity and personal touch, turning her lifelong passion for fashion into a full-time career after graduating with a BFA in Fashion Design.
