

US Homeless Population Continues to Move Deeper Into Isolation

AUSTIN, TEXAS, UNITED STATES, March 30, 2023 /EINPresswire.com/ -- MyEListing.com, a free commercial real estate listing, and data platform, recently published a report illustrating a state-by-state comparative analysis of homelessness in the United States.

Primarily, the report found that, since 2019, approximately 40% of homeless individuals in the US are entirely unsheltered; homeless individuals living in emergency shelters increased by 1%; and homeless individuals using transitional housing have decreased by 19%.

According to the report, more homeless live in places not meant for housing, such as cars, streets, or other public places.

“The total homelessness rate has remained relatively unchanged, with a .03% increase from 2019 to 2022,” says the report. “However, the increase in unsheltered individuals and the decrease in transitional housing usage underscores the urgent need for comprehensive, coordinated solutions to address homelessness in the United States.”

As of 2022, 11% of US homeless are living in transitional housing, 49% in emergency shelters, and 40% without shelter, with 89% of the homeless using emergency shelters or living without any shelter at all, the general trend in American homelessness seems to be moving towards a deeper state of isolation instead of assimilation.

The report also found that men are more likely to be homeless than women and that 1 in every five homeless individuals is severely mentally ill. Additionally, it found that one in every six homeless individuals suffers from chronic substance abuse, and 1 in every twelve are victims of domestic violence.
