Kickstarting the Program: 100 Locks for 30 Nashville Locations

To kick off the Guardian Angel program, HavenLock is donating 100 of its innovative Lockdown systems to 30 schools, churches, and medical facilities in the Nashville area. By doing so, the company demonstrates its commitment to enhancing security measures in its local community.

DHS Safety Act Designation

HavenLock is also a designated company under the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) Safety Act, providing liability protection from the Federal government for facilities that install HavenLock products. This designation further validates the company's commitment to security and its innovative approach to protecting vulnerable locations.

Giving Back to the Community

Reflecting on the importance of the Guardian Angel program, HavenLock CEO Alex Bertelli stated, "HavenLock is a Nashville based security hardware technology company committed to protecting the members of our community and those across the U.S. With the recent news regarding The Covenant School, we believe it is our duty to start this program here in our home town. As our community grieves, we need to come together to support each other and lift Nashville back up. Active shooter incidents are not going away anytime soon. We must take proactive steps to use technology, training, and deterrents to protect our students, teachers, congregants, and those that are vulnerable to these types of attacks. Haven has worked hard to build the safest, most advanced, and compliant locking system in the world. The solution starts with parents, teachers, and administrators working together to take steps to defend their facilities. We want to be a part of the solution to ensure we have the safest communities in the world."
