An instrument for measuring temperature is a thermal imager. Thermographic cameras, infrared cameras, and thermal imaging cameras are other names for thermal imagers. Thermal imagers come in fixed and portable varieties. These thermal imagers are of the non-contact variety, which implies that neither the substance whose temperature needs to be monitored nor the device are in physical contact. All materials' infrared energy emissions, transmissions, and reflections are picked up by thermal imagers. By using infrared radiation, the device produces images that are comparable to those from a normal

According to the report, the global market for portable thermal imagers is estimated to reach a value of $1.2 billion by 2025, up from $0.8 billion in 2018. The market is expected to grow at a CAGR of 41% over the period. North America held the largest share of the global market in 2018, and the market in the region is estimated to witness an incremental growth of 41%, followed by Europe, North America, Middle East & Africa, and Latin America.
