I had heard the voice of a Jamaican artist going by the name of Ann Ominous... The vocals she sent me were amazing. Her voice sits comfortably with artists like Koffee, Jaz Elise and Lila Iké.”

Paul Fox, Singer, Songwriter and Producer

Ann’s soulful, poignant vocals set the scene, over a sparse, futuristic digital rhythm, as she and Paul harmonise for the song’s powerful chorus of unity in the face of an uncertain future.

“I decided to create an atmospheric track” says Paul of the song’s genesis “My long-time collaborator, Antonio Rodriguez, added synth sounds that felt like something out of the Blade Runner soundtrack. I had heard the voice of a Jamaican artist going by the name of Ann Ominous so I contacted her for a collaboration. The vocals she sent me were amazing. Her voice sits comfortably with artists like Koffee, Jaz Elise and Lila Iké. I then wrote my lyrics and added my vocals. The song is about taking time out to think about our actions and how they will affect the next generation.”

Inspired by the 80s UK roots reggae sound system revival led by Jah Shaka, Paul Fox cut his first tune with Nick Manasseh, Writing On The Wall, three decades ago. Through the years, he has collaborated with revered reggae artists including Apache Indian, Jonah Dan, Michael Rose, Rod Taylor, Brother Culture, Dubheart, and Alpha & Omega.

As her name suggests Ann Ominous is a mysterious rising Jamaican artist, whose background information remains deliberately unknown.

She is the second Jamaican singer Paul has worked with as he gears up for the release of his forthcoming new album. Previously, he collaborated with FireVerse for conscious dancehall track, World We Living In.

A Better Tomorrow is out Friday April 28th, accompanied by its own lyric video.
