About LA Weekly

Founded in 1978 by an investment group that included actor Michael Douglas, L.A. Weekly is the nation's mostly widely read alt-weekly, with well over 4 million active users visiting laweekly.com each month.

The Weekly is also an important journalistic force in Southern California. Weekly reporter Christine Pelisek broke the story of the "Grim Sleeper" serial killer, a true-crime blockbuster that was later optioned into a Lifetime TV movie. Our writers have dominated the L.A. Press Club's Journalist of the Year awards year after year. Nationally, the Weekly has won more awards from the Association of Alternative Newsmedia than any other publication in the country. And in 2007 it became the first newspaper to be awarded the Pulitzer Prize for restaurant criticism.

L.A. Weekly not only engages readers in print and online but on social media channels and the streets of the city with some of L.A.'s best live events.
