As they do so, Lovin stated,

'One of the biggest challenges they face is the staffing and motivation of employees.'

One of the tips Lovin offered to deal with this challenge is that,

'Businesses focus heavily on clear and regular communication. One of the most important things employers can do is to communicate clearly and regularly with their employees. It is essential for managers to let employees know what's happening, what changes are coming, and what's expected of them. Also, businesses should ensure that staff members have all the information they need to do their jobs effectively.'

Lovin also noted that business executives should try and be flexible. He says;

'The pandemic has taught us that things can change rapidly, and employers must be prepared to adapt. Managers should be flexible with work schedules, deadlines, and other work arrangements. Allow for remote work when possible and provide the necessary tools and resources to make it work.'

Lovin also noted that,

'Businesses should prioritize employee health and safety going into the future. Companies should ensure that the workplace is safe and that all necessary measures are in place to prevent the spread of Covid-19. For instance, businesses can provide personal protective equipment (PPE) and ensure that employees can access hand sanitisers and other hygiene products.'

Lovin also noted that post-pandemic, it is important for businesses to recognize and reward employees. He noted that the pandemic has been tough on everyone, and employees have gone above and beyond to keep the business running. Lovin said that,

'Recognising their hard work and rewarding them for their efforts can go a long way in improving their productivity.'

Lovin also touched on the need to provide opportunities for learning and growth. He noted that, with the pandemic disrupting traditional business ways, employees need to adapt to new ways of working. To quote him,

'Provide opportunities for learning and growth, such as training programs and workshops. This will help them acquire new skills and keep them motivated and engaged.'

Lastly, Lovin encouraged businesses to encourage work-life balance: Lovin noted that the pandemic had blurred the lines between work and home, and many employees struggle to maintain a healthy work-life balance. As such, Lovin said,

'Business executives should encourage employees to take breaks, unplug from work, and prioritize their mental and emotional well-being.'
