Sea moss is getting a well-deserved moment in the spotlight due to its recently popularized potential health benefits. Also known as Irish moss (and scientifically as Chondrus crispus), sea moss is edible red seaweed or algae growing on the Northern Atlantic's rocky coast. Nutritionally, sea moss is low in calories and sugar and contains little protein. Like other seaweeds, it is low in fat, but a good amount is polyunsaturated fat, a nutritious type of healthy fat that may help reduce cholesterol levels.

Soaked sea moss blended with water is available in online and retail markets as sea moss gel. However, when buying sea moss online, consumers need to buy it from a reputable source.

Some vendors sell pool-harvested sea moss to their customers. Pool-harvested sea moss in Australia is artificially grown in salt brine that mimics the ocean liquid and movement. And in contrast to real sea moss, fake sea moss does not have a faint chlorine smell. Companies such as The Sea Moss Harvest constantly screen their suppliers to ensure their customers get the highest-grade sea moss. Their wild-harvested sea moss is sourced from St. Lucia and is completely natural. Wild harvested sea moss grows naturally in the marine environment so that the seaweed can absorb the nutrients from the ocean. This type of moss is preferred because it is more nutrient-dense and has the most nourishing benefits when consumed.

Sea moss's slimy texture and fishy taste are not of risk but still of note. Raw sea moss has an earthy, underwater taste similar to clams and oysters. Since many people find this smell slightly unpleasant, Australian brands like The Sea Moss Harvest have created exciting and delicious flavors. They offer Cranberry Raspberry Sea Moss Gel, Orange Mango Sea Moss Gel, Lemonade Sea Moss Gel, and various other flavors. All their products are unsweetened, organic, vegan, and gluten-free and do not contain any preservatives. The company also provides fast shipping and secure payment gateways to ensure customer satisfaction.

About The Sea Moss Harvest
