boosting the demand for HVAC filters. Increasing research and development activities for production of high-efficiency HVAC filters, which can reduce allergens and dust, are also augmenting the market for HVAC filters.

Since they can easily capture airborne particles including dust, mites, mould spores, pollen, and pet dander in the air inside homes, high-efficiency particulate air (HEPA) filters are being used more frequently in both the residential and commercial sectors. Due to their ability to capture even the smallest airborne particles, HEPA filters are becoming more popular among smokers, pet owners, asthmatics, and new generations of parents.

Key Highlights of Report

In April 2020, Camfil Svenska AB, an air filter company, announced that the company had acquired Resema AB, its fellow Sweden-based filter company, and Resema A/S, its Denmark-based sister company. The acquisition is expected to strengthen the company's position in the air filtration industry in the Nordic region.

The HEPA segment held the largest market share of 49.9% in 2019. Increasing prevalence of asthma among people is driving the demand for HEPA air purifiers, as they remove common household allergens such as mite feces, mold spores, and household dust particles.

The synthetic polymer segment is anticipated to expand at the most rapid CAGR of 5.8% during the forecast period. High mechanical resistance of synthetic polymers reduces the chances of contamination of filtered air by fibers or gases coming from the filter material itself. This factor is driving the segment.
