In partnership with Chicago Chefs Cook, Ina has asked these chefs, and the greater Chicago community, to join together in honoring two organizations making Chicago a better place to live, grow, and flourish. For years Ina gave back to her community through activism and a commitment to many causes dear to her heart. In a time when there were few female chef leaders, Ina stood up and cut a unique path through what was certainly tough terrain. On this night she has chosen two organizations of the next generation as beneficiaries, Green City Market (www.greencitymarket.org) and Pilot Light (www.pilotlightchefs.org), in part because they represent Chicago in its broad-shouldered best.

It's no surprise that these organizations are led in great part by chefs—leaders who want to use their resources and expertise to promote peace and nourishment, local agriculture, and food education. Few cities can claim such an involved and dedicated culinary community as Chicago. “We are unique in the efforts our chefs have made not just to give back, but to organize and build mechanisms for change,” shared Pilot Light co-founder and Lula Cafe owner, chef Jason Hammel. “These Chicago organizations have taken it upon themselves to create meaningful experiences for the youth of our city, in schools and at farmers markets, and to provide resources for people in our global community suffering from war and natural disasters. On April 26th we celebrate this innovative spirit.”

This event is made possible by the Chicago Chefs Cook leadership team including Chef Sarah Stegner (Prairie Grass Cafe), Chef Tony Priolo (Piccolo Sogno), Darren Gest (Deloitte Consulting), Eda Davidman (Chicago Chefs Cook) and Jodi Fyfe (The Paramount Group).
