Originally from Abilene, Texas, Chris now resides in Georgetown. He earned Master of Arts (MA) degrees in Operational Art and Military Science from Air University, Montgomery, Alabama and Computer Resources / Information Management from Webster University, Webster Groves, Missouri. This dedication to learning carries over into his work as a wealth manager. "I believe a commitment to learning about and understanding client needs is one of my key strengths as a financial advisor," says Chris. "To guide my clients with care and integrity, I must fully comprehend the scope of their needs."

A financial journey often requires stamina, patience, and courage to succeed. As a retired Air Force Colonel, this is familiar territory for Chris, a decorated combat commander and two-time Bronze Star recipient who has flown 288 combat/combat support sorties in three major conflicts. Guided by this unique experience, he advises clients to "only take as much risk as necessary in order to accomplish their goals." His personal motto is Fortitudine Vincimus, which translates to "By Endurance We Conquer."

"I understand the idea of setting a goal and working toward it with resolve," declares Chris, "and I believe that I was spared in combat for the purpose of serving others and making a positive difference in their lives."

Chris considers building relationships one of the most important aspects of his work. He deems it a privilege to serve his clients in attempting to create financial security throughout the various stages of their lives.

His areas of focus include:

- Small Business Owners
- Women in Transition
- Families/Individuals within 5-7 years of Retirement

"We're pleased to welcome Chris to Kingsview Partners," says CEO Sean McGillivray. "His impressive skillset and unique perspective complement and build on our mission: to provide Kingsview clients with an elevated standard of care."
