a Service market size, recent technological advances, and inventions. The research report consists of an introduction of the market, key players, opportunities, restraints, product and type classification, and overall market analysis.

The global Network as a Service (NaaS) market size reached USD 16.65 Billion in 2021 and is expected to register a revenue CAGR of 22.4 % during the forecast period, according to latest analysis by Emergen Research. Network as a Service (NaaS) is a critical component in enterprise network architecture for supporting the adaptation of innovative technologies depending on market demands, as well as for improving network performance, productivity, user experiences, and proactive maintenance. Owing to the increased internet penetration in functional business domains, many enterprises are deploying Network as a Service (Naas) in their business functions. Growing number of customers are turning to cloud alternatives to help them save money on network quality improvement. Network as a Service (NaaS) reduces costs by introducing new virtualized network infrastructure processes for hardware, software, operations, and maintenance. In addition, technological advancements in Machine Learning (ML) and Artificial Intelligence (AI) based Network as a Service (NaaS) algorithms are accelerating revenue growth of the market. Many market players are introducing Artificial Intelligence (AI) and Machine Learning (ML) algorithms to streamline and distribution of data. These metrics are significant in cost reduction and time. However, concerns regarding data security are a significant barrier to network as a service market growth. The protection of varied personal user data is becoming challenging owing to the rise in cyberattacks and data breaches. According to a leading cybersecurity company, globally WannaCry ransomware attacks affect around 230,000 computers. Revenue and reputation of the company may significantly affect owing to data breaches.
