According to the World Bank, over three-fourths of the global population lives in the developing countries, where total number of birth are highest, such as India and China. In addition, exponential increase in middle-class population, rise in female participation rate in the workforce, and rapid urbanization in both developed and emerging markets have bolstered the adoption rate of convenience-oriented lifestyle, resulting in increased demand for baby-related accessories, including baby rompers. Population in India is increasing at a steady rate along with improvement in standard of living, which leads to increase in demand for baby-related products. In addition, the Chinese Government in 2016 relaxed its decades-old one-child policy, allowing all couples to have two and three kids to address the challenge of an aging population. Therefore, rise in number of births and increase in product awareness are expected to positively impact the market growth in developing economies.

The baby romper market is highly fragmented with significant presence of a large number of regional players. Baby rompers have gained huge traction over the last few years, owing to which various low-quality baby rompers are flooded in the market. The right type of baby romper has no side effects on babies. However, counterfeit and low-quality baby romper available in the market might increase the risk of irritation on the baby's skin. Low-quality material and production might cause discomfort among babies. A lot of these counterfeits imitate big brands and names, which tarnishes the brand image. International organizations in collusion with leading brands have introduced stringent rules and regulations to curb well-entrenched system of counterfeiting, however, more efforts need to be made regionally and globally to scuttle the rapidly advancing counterfeiting market. Therefore, availability of low-quality counterfeit product hampers the overall expansion of the baby romper market in terms of value sales.
