Young families are moving out to small Texas towns and snapping up home rentals.”

Jason Marascio

“Young families are moving out to small Texas towns and snapping up home rentals. Property investors have caught on to this trend and are buying more properties in the Dallas suburbs, but need help with managing them,” explained Jason Marascio, North Texas Property Management CEO. “It can be challenging to locate property managers to care for a rental in a small town. My professional team is here to help solve that problem!”

Property investors with single-family home rentals in the Dallas suburbs can find support on the city-specific landing pages for;

- * Lucas at <https://www.ntxpm.com/lucas/>
- * Wylie at <https://www.ntxpm.com/wylie/>
- * Little Elm at <https://www.ntxpm.com/little-elm/>
- * Princeton at <https://www.ntxpm.com/princeton/>
- * Anna at <https://www.ntxpm.com/anna/>

* Lewisville at <https://www.ntxpm.com/lewisville/>

THE BEST PROPERTY MANAGEMENT TEAM IS EASY TO FIND FOR INVESTORS WHO KNOW WHERE TO LOOK

Here is the background on this release. The popularity of small-town living in Texas is a growing trend. Working parents may choose to live in smaller, safer communities that provide more space and safety for their children. Opportunities to work from home, or in hybrid positions also allow more flexibility where to live. Property investors are noticing the trend and buying single-family homes in smaller towns such as Little Elm, Princeton, Lucas, Wylie, Anna, and Lewisville. The challenge around small-town living can be the need for professional services. Finding a local expert to handle a property such as a family-style rental is easy if investors know where to look.
