The film composer will begin work on adaptive music for the studio's projects. The feature of the adaptive music is not only the static accompaniment of the gameplay, but the constant change of music depending on the nature of game situations.

We are sure that such a move will not only bring a unique accent to the studio's projects, but will also reveal the talented composer's potential”

Sergey Belyaev, the studio's CEO and co-founder

The process of creating adaptive music can be divided into three stages: conceptualization, writing music and implementation. During the last stage, it is important to test the adaptive music to make sure that it works as intended and provides the desired emotional and interactive impact. This may require making small changes to the music or trigger logic to make sure the music properly responds to the player's actions and choices.

“The game is a unique field in which the music develops non-linearly, its development dictated by the player's actions. Writing such music is an interesting experience and a challenge for me,” - comments Dmitry Selipanov.

Dmitry's creative handwriting is an unusual combination of orchestral traditions, modern electronic genres, minimalism and post-rock, which can certainly show up in his work with Infusion Games.

Dmitry Selipanov is an award-winning composer who has won more than 20 awards, including box office hits of feature films, indie films, animated films and other projects. As an orchestrator, arranger and conductor, Dmitry collaborates with many musical projects and artists. Among them are Terra Maitz, Zemfira, and others.

Infusion Games is a European studio founded in 2019. To date, the studio is developing two projects: the RPG-battler Arena Heroes and the mobile cyberpunk shooter with flying vehicles Cyber Wars.

Cyber Wars - is a vehicular shooter with PvP multiplayer and unlimited kick-ass action, set in a beautiful futuristic dystopia.
