Urinary self-catheterization is a medical procedure that involves the insertion of a thin, flexible tube called a catheter into the bladder through the urethra. This is usually done to drain urine from the bladder when a person is unable to do so on their own due to a medical condition or injury.

Self-catheterization is typically performed by the patient themselves, with proper instruction and training from a healthcare professional. The procedure is often used to manage urinary retention, which is the inability to empty the bladder completely, or to treat urinary incontinence, which is the involuntary loss of urine.
