Applicants who have applied using the paid submission service provided by US GREEN CARD OFFICE are not required to check if they are selected as they will receive an email and a personal phone call from the immigration experts at US GREEN CARD OFFICE with the good news that their application has been selected for further processing.

Not selected? Don't give up; there's always the next time.”

Applicants that submitted applications using the free service must check the application status either by using the free Green Card Program Winner Checking System or checking the status on the US government website dvprogram.state.gov

Due to high demand in the first few weeks of May, the US government service may be very slow or temporarily unavailable.

It's crucial to note that failing to submit the DS-260 online or submitting it too late will lead to losing the chance of getting a Green Card via the Diversity Visa Program. Therefore all selectees must act promptly and submit the required DS-260 to avoid missing this incredible opportunity.

On the other hand, applicants not among this year's lucky winners should not be discouraged. It is now time to prepare for the upcoming DV-2025 program. The application deadline for this program is in November 2023. Applicants should familiarize themselves with the application process on www.usgreencardoffice.com

Ever wondered what the chance of winning the Diversity Visa Program is.

The Diversity Visa Program, also known as the Green Card Program, is a fantastic opportunity for those seeking to move to the United States. Each year, the program provides up to 50,000 immigrant visas to individuals from countries with low rates of immigration to the United States.

And the best part is that the chance of winning the program is pretty good.

While it may seem like winning a lottery is a long shot, the odds of winning the Diversity Visa Program are much higher than most might think.

In fact, the chances of winning a Green Card through the Diversity Visa Program are significantly higher than the chances of winning a regular lottery.

When applying for the Green Card Program, names are entered into a pool of other applicants, and from there, a computer randomly selects winners.

But unlike a regular lottery where the odds of winning can be as low as 1 in millions, the odds of winning the Diversity Visa Program are much more favorable. In fact, the odds of winning vary depending on the number of applicants from each country, but they generally fall within the range of 1:20 and 1:75

Now, that may not seem like much, but when considering tens of millions apply for the DV Program each year, those odds become much more favorable. And when factor in the benefits of winning a Green Card, such as the ability to live and work in the United States permanently, the opportunity becomes even more exciting.

So, to sum it up, the chance of winning the Diversity Visa Program in the United States is actually pretty good, and it's a fantastic opportunity for those seeking a Green Card. The odds of winning are much higher than winning a regular lottery, and with the potential benefits of a Green Card, it's definitely an opportunity worth pursuing.

Here are five benefits of having a Green Card:

1. Legal status: A Green Card provides the holder with legal status, allowing the Green Card holder to live and work in the United States permanently.
2. Access to education: With a Green Card, the holder has access to education and can apply for financial aid.
3. Travel: Green Card holders can travel in and out of the country without any restrictions.
4. Social Security: Green Card holders are eligible for Social Security benefits upon retirement.
5. Citizenship: After a certain period of time, Green Card holders can apply for US citizenship, which provides them with additional benefits.

In conclusion, it's an exciting time for those who have applied for the DV program. US Green Card Office wishes all applicants the best of luck and urges all applicants to act quickly if selected.

All the ones not selected not, don't give up; there's always the next time.
