Dental implants involve the use of a titanium screw to replace a missing tooth root, followed by the addition of an abutment and custom-made crown to give the implants a natural look and feel. People who have missing teeth or are at risk of losing them due to disease, age, or trauma qualify for implants. However, they should not have any gum diseases or tooth decay that could affect the success rate of the treatment.

According to Dr. Matthew Lang, dentist in Center Valley, another important factor in dental implant success is the strength and density of the jawbone. Center Valley Dental includes supplemental procedures like bone grafts to help strengthen a patient's jawbone.

To improve their chances of success, candidates should maintain good oral care by brushing twice a day and flossing. During a consultation, Dr. Lang and his team will guide patients through the dental implant procedure and help them improve the likelihood of the surgery's success.
