Prestigious and thought-provoking

Cryptology's CMO, Dagmara Handzlik, shared her insights during the Grit Daily panel, discussing Real World Assets (RWA) and 'How tokenization is moving beyond art collectibles to real-life applications'. Moderated by CoinTelegraph's Turner Wright, this topical debate covered one of the key narratives shaping DeFi this year - RWA.

"From real estate to jewelry, the tokenization of real-world assets not only provides users with tangible benefits, access to fractional ownership and new investment opportunities but also has enormous potential to bring significant additional yields streams into crypto and decentralized finance," says Dagmara Handzlik, CMO of Cryptology.

Solving some of crypto's most pressing problems

With the community's top names in attendance, this year's Consensus was host to a variety of innovative ideas and challenging seminars. Caitlin Long and Erik Voorhees questioned crypto's true purpose and whether the technology can still deliver on its initial promise to improve transparency and resilience. Yuga Labs' CEO, Daniel Alegre, shared his plans for how Bored Ape Yacht Club (BAYC) and NFTs are primed to revolutionize web3 gaming. And Art Blocks' founder and CEO, Erick Calderon, discussed the real cost of creating a blockchain and how Distributed Ledger Technology is transforming value, rights, and royalties.
