Color cosmetics are beauty products used to enhance the external appearance of a human body. These cosmetics are made up of chemicals and natural ingredients such as secretions, pearl powder, ground bamboo, seaweed, venom, Tremella mushrooms, and starfish extract. Color cosmetic products include facial make up product, nail care product, eye make-up product, and lip care products.

The global color cosmetics market is driven by rise in the disposable income in emerging economies such as, India, Brazil, UAE, Saudi Arabia, Africa, and Egypt. Moreover, financial independence of working women influences the market to a large extent. In addition, increased awareness about external appearance fuels the market growth.

In 2016, the mass product segment accounted for the highest share in the market, and is expected to maintain its dominance during the forecast period, owing to ease of availability and affordability. Moreover, increased innovations in mass products segment, such as anti-aging cream and UV protection lotions, drive the market growth.
