Microservices in healthcare refers to the use of microservices architecture in developing and delivering healthcare software applications. Microservices are a software development approach where a large application is broken down into smaller, independent, and modular services that can communicate with each other through APIs.

In healthcare, microservices can be used to develop various software applications such as electronic health records (EHRs), medical imaging software, telemedicine platforms, and healthcare analytics tools. By breaking down these complex applications into smaller services, microservices allow for more agility, flexibility, scalability, and easier maintenance of the software applications.
