of fallen service members on social media and on its website.

“For those of us who have served, Memorial Day is a sacred day, a time of remembrance and reflection, and a day to honor those who have paid the ultimate price,” said Capt. Joe McClain, USN (ret.), CEO, Help Heal Veterans. “Our hope in hosting #VigilforValor, now in its third year, is to give people the opportunity to connect with their community, while shining a light on the remarkable lives of their loved ones.”

Individuals attending #VigilForValor community craft events will create customizable candleholders incorporating photographs, drawings, patches, or other personal items to commemorate those they wish to honor. Those without someone to remember are encouraged to reach out to their community, school, or place of worship, or search local news sources to find someone to honor and learn their story.

#VigilForValor virtual campaign is open to anyone, even if they don't attend a community craft event. All that's required to honor a fallen service is to light a candle, whether made at a community event or from any source. Participants can then share a photo of the individual they are remembering, along with that person's story and the candle they crafted, on social media, using the hashtag #VigilForValor and tagging @HHVets on Twitter and @healvets on Instagram.

Those who do don't use social media are encouraged to email the photos of the individuals they are remembering and their stories to remember@healvets.org. Heal Vets will then share these stories on its website and social media platforms.
