The medical segment is expected to register a steady growth rate. THC, marijuana's primary psychoactive ingredient, slows progression of Alzheimer's disease. THC slows growth of amyloid plaques by blocking brain enzyme that causes them. Alzheimer's disease may develop as a result of these plaques harming brain tissue. Marijuana may be used to treat glaucoma, which gets worse as eye pressure increases and harms optic nerve and vision. According to the National Eye Institute, marijuana lowers intraocular pressure and helps to prevent negative neurological effects and muscle spasms caused by multiple sclerosis.

The Middle East & Africa market is expected to register a considerable growth. The area dominated cannabis cultivation business in terms of revenue share because of quickly evolving laws surrounding cannabis production, consumption, and economic development. Additionally, it is anticipated that growth would be fueled during the forecast period by region's expanding support for hemp and marijuana cultivation through governmental improvements.

In October 10, 2020, STADA Arzneimittel AG partnered with MediPharm Labs, one of the biggest pharmaceutical companies in Germany, to enter the medical cannabis market with debut of two flower products and subsequent release of six more.
