According to the report, based on a scale of 0 (worst) to 100 (best), the five states with the worst public housing are:

1). North Dakota, with a 77.61 HUD score;
2). Montana, with a 78.60 HUD score;
3). Oklahoma, with an 80.29 HUD score;
4). Iowa, with an 80.56 HUD score; and
5). New York, with an 80.90 HUD score.

And according to the report, the five cities with the worst public housing are:

1) Hilton Head Island-Bluffton, SC, with a 72.55 HUD score;
2) Fargo, ND-MN, with a 74.00 HUD score;
3) Omaha-Council Bluffs, NE-IA, with a 74.48 HUD score;
4) Ocala, FL, with a 74.88 HUD score; and
5) Charleston-North Charleston, SC, with a 75.03 HUD score.

While designed to provide safe rental housing for low-income individuals and families, not every public housing complex cuts. And, while federal aid assists in the maintenance and upkeep of these complexes, those responsibilities are delegated mainly to local housing agencies.

"About 20,000 HUD inspections are conducted each year to ensure that families are provided with safe, clean housing," according to the report. "However, federal involvement in public housing doesn't guarantee that every unit provides safe and sanitary housing or is kept in good repair. This is evident by the regular physical inspections by HUD and the variety of scores recorded."

The report also outlines the cities and states with the best public housing. You can read the full report here: https://myelisting.com/commercial-real-estate-news/1517/cities-and-states-with-worst-public-housing/
