Cryopreservation Equipment Market 2023

Cryopreservation is the process of freezing tissues and cells at low temperatures to keep the biological material metabolically inert, maintain its viability, and prevent ice crystal formation. Cells are cryopreserved to minimize genetic change and prevent loss through contamination. The equipment which is designed to preserve the biological material is known as cryopreservation equipment.

Cryopreservation is primarily used for the preservation of oocytes and embryos with in-vitro fertilization (IVF) cycle and before chemotherapy for women diagnosed with breast cancer, to preserve their reproductive capacity. Moreover, it is also used for the preservation of sperms, plant seeds, and other biological materials used for research purposes in the future. The cryopreservation process involves solutions for cryopreservation which include a high concentration of cryoprotective agents. These cryoprotective agents provide improved osmotic balance and dehydration during cooling.
