Rising consumer health awareness is driving the growth of the collagen & gelatin market, as collagen & gelatin intake allows for moisturized skin, which is a key concern among the growing elderly population. Collagen also aids in blood coagulation, wound healing, and nervous system protection, and is in great demand for medicinal applications. Collagen is mostly used as an easy-to-digest nutritional supplement that can be combined with coffee or tea, blended into a smoothie, and mixed with sauces and soups. Additionally, consumption of gelatin is increasing owing to the presence of vegetarian and vegan as well as gluten-free gelatin which is driving revenue growth of the market.

Some Key Highlights From the Report

Porcine segment accounted for the largest revenue share in 2021. Gelatin extracted from pigskin is one of the most commercially utilized gelatin on a global scale owing to its cost-effectiveness. Porcine gelatin contains a high amount of amino acid which is one of the major factors for increasing utilization in confectionery desserts, beverages, meat, and dairy among others. Moreover, rapid adoption of porcine for various clinical treatments such as dermatology, and bones owing to its excellent amino acid profile is increasing revenue growth of the segment.

Food & beverage segment is expected to register a significant revenue growth rate during the forecast period. Increasing consumption of gelatin-based food products and supplements for protein-rich diets is driving revenue growth of the segment. The colloid property of gelatin prevents the crystallization of ice and sugar which is increasing demand for the manufacturing of dairy products and frozen foods.

Gelatin segment is expected to account for a significantly large revenue share over the forecast period. Gelatin products provide a wide range of bloom and viscosity values which are highly utilized in the manufacturing of food products which is one of the major factors driving revenue growth of the segment. Marshmallows contain around 1.5% of gelatin which is sufficient to restrain the crystallization of sugar thereby keeping them soft and chewy.
