"Mental health has reached a crisis level for America's youth and young adults," said Wigginton. "These problems can easily manifest themselves as negative issues with student-athletes in their athletic performance, academic proficiency, and personal lives. My goal is to make CBHA the leader in providing full-service mental health care, from screenings to therapy, for all student-athletes and the institutions they attend."

Under Wigginton's leadership, CBHA will continue expanding its mental health services across college campuses to ensure student-athletes receive the best possible care. "Our services are provided at zero cost to the college or university and the student-athlete," said Wigginton. "It's a rare and exceptional win-win scenario as academic institutions get top-notch mental health care for their students without impacting their already tight budgets."

Within the next 12 months, Wigginton aims to implement CBHA across the majority of college campuses in the United States. "A partnership with our firm is the smart decision," said Wigginton. "It's never been more necessary than today."

With Wigginton at the helm, Collegiate Behavioral Health Associates looks forward to expanding access to quality, full-service mental health care for student-athletes nationwide.
