energy and the benefits of powering their homes with clean, renewable resources has played a major role in advancing the growing solar company with over 8,000 solar installations completed since 2003.

“The strength of all great leaders comes from the teams they lead. I’m blessed to work alongside them, stand in front of them to take the heat, and behind them to push them forward. My work family drives me,” said Scott Maskin on his Titan award honors.

From its beginnings in 2003 through navigating the pandemic with supply chain and inflation challenges to its merger with publicly-traded Pineapple Energy, SUNation has grown from a solar business to a renewable energy leader and resource, including services in roofing, energy storage, EV charging, and now SPAN smart electrical panels.

The TITAN Business Awards was formed with the sole mission of acknowledging the achievements of entrepreneurs and organizations worldwide. The competition aims to provide recognition to those overshadowed by industry giants, and the giants themselves. With a level playing field, only those who qualify will be deemed TITANs.

Hosted by the International Awards Associate (IAA), the competition accepts entries from entrepreneurs, SMEs, and large organizations. Whether these parties are private or public, for-profit or non-profit does not affect their chances at winning, so the opportunity extends itself equally to various industries in the market.

“We wish to congratulate the winners and commend them for the stellar works they had submitted,” Thomas Brandt, spokesperson of IAA, remarked. “We are proud to be a platform for entrepreneurs and businesses to showcase their works and to honor their excellence in business with recognition.”

The Jury & Evaluation Process As the competition is focused on rewarding excellence, it gives weightage to impartiality and diversity in perspective in the judging process. To satisfy that aspect, a myriad of reputable professionals were brought onto the jury panel. These jurors are under the employment of prestigious organizations, such as Xavier Moreano Calero (Netlife), Surabhi Shastri (Instagram / Meta), Vladimer Botsvadze (RETHINK Retail), Oliver Dietrich (Mission Mittelstand), and Sudha Ranganathan (LinkedIn).

As for impartiality, the competition upheld the blind judging method. Jurors were only allowed to assess each entry in its own vacuum, so they could only win entirely on their own merits and without being compared to other entries. Further, standards based on contemporary industry practices served as benchmarks in assessments.

"The TITAN Business Awards is created to spotlight those who drive their organizations toward greatness, whether they be leaders or the teams supporting the visionaries," Thomas remarked. "No matter what the organization is, it is undeniable through their fruits that they do exhibit qualities worth mimicking by the corporate world. Truly, these people help drive industries forward."
