

Angel's Vaccine" by Spiros Rolakis explores spirituality, reincarnation

Novel Follows COVID-19 Victim's Afterlife Journey

HERACLION, CRETE, GREECE, May 18, 2023

/EINPresswire.com/ -- In Spiros Rolakis' novel, "Angel's Vaccine," readers will follow an Italian businessman who travels to China during the height of the COVID-19 pandemic, contracting the disease and ultimately succumbing to it. However, this is only the beginning of his journey, as the narrative follows his mind and soul, which go on separate paths after his death to give new hope and life to others in need.

After succumbing to COVID, Errico's existence continues on a wholly different plane of reality, as his body and mind part from his body but continue to persist due to his strong will. But those two aspects of himself are separated from each other, with the essence of his mind entering one body while the soul ends up inhabiting another - giving each one new leases on life. Errico's consciousness resuscitates a coma patient named Constantinos while his soul enters a stillborn baby named Carolina, giving her a second chance.

With his novel "Angel's Vaccine" Rolakis highlights his philosophy on the differing aspects of human existence, namely the body, mind and soul. Errico, through Constantinos, comes across a forbidden book that delves into the philosophical ramifications of the threefold existence of man. This tome is then handed over to Carolina. Errico, Constantinos and Carolina explore the ramification of these unprecedented events and their implications on the notion of selfhood and the nature of life itself.
