Exodus Road announced today that Alece Ronzino joined the nonprofit's U.S. Board of Directors. Ronzino is an entrepreneur and longtime nonprofit professional with more than 25 years of experience actively leading and creating impact in the fight against injustice around the world. Her passion for equipping and empowering local leaders to combat systemic poverty is evident through her pioneering work in South Africa, where she founded Thrive Africa and lived for 13 years.

“As an organization that empowers ordinary individuals in the fight against human trafficking, The Exodus Road aligns with my belief that everyone can make a difference,” Ronzino said. “It is an incredible honor to be a part of their innovative and crucial work!”

In April 2014, Ronzino traveled with The Exodus Road to Thailand to help shed light on the reality of human trafficking. Ronzino was an active, human rights blogger at the time and joined to better understand and share with her readers the pervasiveness of sexual exploitation. She saw firsthand how minors and adults are forced into trafficking situations.

Moved by The Exodus Road's work, Ronzino stayed connected with the organization as an impact partner. She's continued to support The Exodus Road's anti-trafficking efforts around the world through donations and relationship-building.

The Exodus Road is an international nonprofit that combats human trafficking through intervention with local law enforcement, training and education, and aftercare services. Working with local staff, NGO partners and law enforcement agencies, The Exodus Road helps to liberate trafficked individuals, arrest traffickers and provide restorative care for survivors. Since its founding in 2012, the organization has assisted police in the rescue of more than 2,000 survivors and the arrests of over 1,000 offenders, numbers that grow almost daily.

“Alece has a deep heart for the health and sustainability of justice work and for the people who are on the ground doing it,” Laura Parker, The Exodus Road’s CEO and co-founder, said. “Her experience in international development work and communications are valuable strengths that will support The Exodus Road as we continue to grow. We are so excited that she’s bringing her leadership and experience to the board and to our teams around the world.”

After Ronzino’s time in South Africa, she returned to the States and launched Rest Easy Nashville, a boutique short-term rental property management firm. She currently leads the firm as the CEO and lives in Nashville with her husband and three children. She also founded and curated One Word 365 as well as Grit and Glory. Ronzino’s entrepreneurial spirit and dedication to making a difference are reflected in her work and advocacy.

Alece Ronzino is an experienced nonprofit professional who is now joining The Exodus Road's U.S. Board of Directors.

In addition to Ronzino, The Exodus Road is welcoming advocate Hollie Smith and financial expert Ted Rusinoff to the U.S. board. They are joining a unique and dynamic community of experts that includes corporate-strategy consultant Steve Leigh, country singer Craig Morgan, activist Edwin Desamour, Living Opera CEO Soula Parassidis, humanitarian photographer Nate Griffin, Neema Development founder Sarah Ray and The Exodus Road’s co-founder and CEO Laura Parker.
