Some Key Highlights From the Report

The ethylene oxide segment accounted for the largest revenue share in 2021. The use of ethylene oxide in various medical facilities is expanding, which is driving the segment's expansion. Ethylene Oxide (EtO) can be used and operated without the need for installation. When employing EtO, no excessive heat, moisture, or radiation is used to sterilize the items. Because of this, EtO can sterilize a variety of materials, particularly the polymeric parts that are frequently found in medical devices.

Hospital segment accounted for a significant revenue share in 2021. One of the main factors driving the segment's revenue growth is the rising occurrence of nosocomial infections. Due to the rising incidence of HAIs, sterilization is becoming more and more common in hospitals and other healthcare facilities.

Market in North America accounted for the largest revenue share in 2021. A significant factor driving market revenue growth in this region is the development of information technology in the medical sterilization sector. The rapid expansion of the market in this area is related to the widespread use of these sterilization techniques in numerous healthcare applications. Numerous organizations in these nations are also contributing to the development of cutting-edge sterilizing techniques in the region. The region's growing number of market participants investing in the production of sterilization devices is a key element driving revenue growth.
