sustainability and farm-to-table movements to technology's impact on food production and distribution as well as business mentorship programs for up-and-coming food businesses. This event will offer guests the chance to network with leaders, and peers in the food industry and learn from top industry educators.

The event will also host a local non-profit organization that is helping underserved communities facing food scarcity and aims to encourage and connect people from all backgrounds to create a sustainable food economy and supportive ecosystem in Atlanta, as well as ignite interest for anyone considering getting into the food industry or becoming a chef.

"This dinner event will serve as a catalyst to foster dialogue and unity among diverse individuals, to address the intricate web of food-related trials that permeate our society - from aspiring entrepreneurs navigating the food industry to the resilient souls grappling with the harsh reality of food scarcity. With this event, we hope to invigorate the Georgia economy by harnessing the potential of the F&B industry to generate employment opportunities and forge deep-rooted connections between B2B enterprises and their communities at large," affirms Chef Chris Morrison.

The Little Farmhouse Café is a warm and inviting private event space that has hosted many exclusive functions and themed pop-up events and has drawn interest from corporations, film and television production companies, and influencers in Atlanta who are looking for a wholesome and fun space to host weddings, parties, brunches, and catered business events. The comfortable space is the perfect setting for this intimate and thought-provoking networking

Chef Chris will also serve his favorite dish – smoked octopus – at the dinner.
