Message and The Messenger Movie

As the audience gets a glimpse into the lives of each character, there is a sense of “keeping it real” in every scene. This film goes behind the curtain and exposes realities that pew warmers know but do not want to admit. Mrs. Pride causes the viewer to look in the mirror of reality and see the undeniable truth.

According to the multi-talented, gifted writer and director Leah, the synopsis of “Message and The Messenger” is: “Jessica Clark starts a business with no plan, no money, and no integrity; convinced that God will bless her business solely because she is a faithful tither. Jessica, like many members of her church, is being taken advantage of by her pastor until God sends a message through an unlikely messenger.”

“Message and The Messenger” shines a light on the teachings of the “Prosperity Gospel,” which is prevalent in so many local assemblies. Her fearless unveiling highlights its pitfalls and its hypocrisy. The storyline weaves a tapestry of players that are very recognizable to many, from the struggling female entrepreneur to the polished preacher. Mrs. Pride brings her own embolden style to the screen, which is her trademark. This movie will inspire movie fans to put this film on their “watch again” list as they wait for more gems from Leah.
