Homecare oxygen concentrators are medical devices designed to deliver a concentrated flow of oxygen to individuals who require supplemental oxygen therapy in the comfort of their homes. These devices are used to treat respiratory conditions such as chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD), emphysema, or other lung diseases that result in low blood oxygen levels. Homecare oxygen concentrators extract oxygen from the surrounding air, concentrate it, and deliver it to the patient through a nasal cannula or mask.

The primary function of homecare oxygen concentrators is to increase the oxygen levels in the patient's bloodstream, improving their ability to breathe and reducing symptoms such as shortness of breath, fatigue, and dizziness. Unlike traditional oxygen tanks or cylinders, which require refilling or replacement, homecare oxygen concentrators are capable of generating a continuous supply of oxygen without the need for frequent replacements. They are compact, portable, and easy to use, allowing patients to maintain their mobility and engage in daily activities while receiving the necessary oxygen therapy.
